Introduction

When the Presbyterian Church of England was reconstituted as a Synod in 1843, the first steps taken included the formation of a Foreign Missions Committee and the sending out of its first missionary to China in 1847. Throughout its history all the missionary work was done under the authority of the Synod (later Assembly) of the Church, and its archives reflect the integral character of Church and Mission. These archives include those of the Women's Missionary Association, founded in 1878, and constituting the main ancillary organization responsible for the recruitment, training, and support of women missionaries.

By far the largest part of the Mission was in China and its work there was concentrated in South Fujian, East Guangdong, and Taiwan. The close contacts of these areas with Overseas Chinese led to the extension of the Mission's work to Singapore and Malaysia from 1881 onward. Earlier, in 1862, work had also begun in India, in the Rajshahi district of Bengal. These five overseas areas together with the home base define the scope of the archives. For each area there is a section for General Correspondence with the several Mission Councils, Church bodies, and individual missionaries, Minutes, and Reports. For the home base there are the letters of the Secretaries, Minutes and Reports of the home committees and of other organizations, internal and external, with which the Foreign Missions Committee and the Women's Missionary Association were related.

Up to the end of the nineteenth century most of the missionaries came from Scotland, the English Presbyterian Mission providing an opportunity for service in China before the Scottish Churches began their own mission work in that country. Among them were some of the best known missionaries, notably the pioneer, William Chalmers Burns, Carstairs Douglas of Amoy, John Campbell Gibson of Swatow, and Thomas Barclay of Formosa (Taiwan). From the early years, first in South Fujian and later elsewhere, emphasis was put on the establishment of a self-governing, self-supporting, and self-propagating Chinese Church. The deeply rooted vernaculars in the areas of the Mission's work led to wide use of Romanized script to achieve the formation of a Bible-reading Church membership. The emphasis on theological education for a well-trained ministry gave birth to such institutions as the Taiwan Theological College, and the Swatow Mission Hospital, founded in 1863, demonstrated how effective the healing ministry can be in extending the Church.

Throughout the period covered by the archives, the small area of China to which they pertain had its full share of events and movements that have shaped its modern history. The Opium Trade, the Coolie Trade, the Treaties and life in the Treaty Ports, missionary "cases", Japanese colonialism as experienced in Taiwan and its effect on Church and Mission, Chinese Nationalism in the 1920s and its impact between 1925 and 1929, the Sino-Japanese war during which almost the entire area of the Mission's work was occupied – these are some of the historical conditions under which the missionaries worked and on which they reflected.

During World War II, the offices of the Presbyterian Church of England in London were demolished by enemy action. The loss of life and leadership was severe. Miraculously, this large proportion of mission records was saved, but the rest was unfortunately lost.
