The Kilborn Family:

A Record of a Canadian Family's Service to Medical Work and Education in China and Hong Kong

BERTHA HENSMAN, Ph.D., D.Phil.,^{*}
Hong Kong

WHAT Kipling said of his countrymen, "And what should they know of England who only England know?" perhaps may be said with equal truth of Canadians. Most English-speaking Canadians abroad are mistaken for Americans, and in a British Colony such as Hong Kong they are officially designated merely as British subjects. Much medical work has been done in almost every part of the world by Canadian missionaries, and yet when Canadians think of medical missionaries they tend to associate the term with such men as David Livingstone or Albert Schweitzer, neither of whom can be regarded as a typical medical missionary. Because of the vast amount of propaganda done by Chinese communists and their sympathizers, many people seem to think that Norman Bethune, who was in China for about 18 months, was the only Canadian doctor who did anything of importance in that country. An emeritus professor of surgery in an American university has written: "No doctor, not Hippocrates, nor Jenner, nor Pasteur, nor Sir Alexander Fleming is known and venerated by so many people as Norman Bethune." The truth of such a rash statement must be questioned by anyone who knows even a little about China and the Chinese, for, to mention only one of China's medical men, Hua T'o is known by more millions than is Bethune. (Hua was a famous Chinese physician and surgeon who lived during the second century, A.D., and is venerated by almost every Chinese.) A Canadian, Robert Moon, has confessed to his previous but typical Canadian ignorance of what his compatriots have been doing and are doing in other countries in the title of his book: "I Found Canada Abroad".

Editor's Note: On June 23, 1967, Dr. Leslie G. Kilborn, who worked closely with the editors in preparing this paper for publication, died suddenly in the Toronto Western Hospital. At the time of his death, Dr. Kilborn was engaged in writing the history of the West China Union University, an undertaking to which he had looked forward for many years. (See Obituaries, page 490.)

Canada ought to know about and be proud of the Kilborns, a Canadian family which for parts of three generations, from 1891 to 1963, served with distinction the cause of medicine and of higher education, in China and Hong Kong.

In 1891, Dr. Omar Leslie Kilborn was one of the pioneer group of missionaries from Canada who made the arduous journey across the Pacific Ocean and (by river steamer and houseboat) up the Yangtze and Min Rivers from Shanghai into Western Szechwan (Fig. 1). He was later a leader among those responsible for the establishment of the West China Union University (W.C.U.U.) in Chengtu, the provincial capital. For many years this was the only institution of modern higher education in China west of Hankow. In 1914 he was eminent among the international group of medical missionaries who founded the Faculty of Medicine of that university. From 1952 his son, Dr. Leslie Gifford Kilborn, was prominent among the promoters of Chung Chi College, a Christian college of higher education in Hong Kong. For 11 years Dr. Leslie G. Kilborn played a major part in

The Final Period.—In 1947, Leslie G. Kilborn married Jean E. Millar, who had gone to West China in 1932 as a medical missionary appointed by the United Church of Canada.

In 1923 Robert B. McClure married Amy Hislop and went to Honan. Their four children are Norah, Douglas, Patricia and Josephine.

In 1949, Mary E. Kilborn went to West China as a nurse under appointment by the United Church of Canada. She returned to Canada in 1951 after the Communist take-over.

In 1952, Leslie and Jean Kilborn left China for Hong Kong, where they continued in medical educational work at the University of Hong Kong until the summer of 1960, and then in Chung Chi College (now one of the Foundation Colleges of the Chinese University of Hong Kong), where Leslie was vice-president. They returned to Canada in 1963, and retired from the work of the Board of World Mission of the United Church of Canada in the summer of 1964.

guiding this college in its development from a post-secondary college in a refugee environment to its establishment in 1963 as one of the three foundation colleges in the Chinese University of Hong Kong. The years between 1891 and 1963 unfold the epic story of this distinguished Canadian medical family.

Omar Leslie Kilborn, M.A., M.D., C.M. (Queen's); D.D. (Victoria), was born near Frankville, Ontario, on November 20, 1867. He was the youngest of five sons of the village blacksmith, only two of whom survived infancy. After elementary school days were over, although he was assisted by his older brother, Dr. Roland K. Kilborn, he earned much of the money needed to pay for his high school and college education. Among other things he was a night railway telegraph operator, and worked his way several times across the Atlantic on ships carrying cattle from Canada to England. In such ways he educated himself in life while earning money for his formal education in school and college. He took his M.A. in chemistry at Queen's University, Kingston, where he was awarded a gold medal, and where he studied medicine. He had not reached his twenty-third birthday when he graduated with the M.D., C.M. degrees, and then went on to postgraduate studies in Edinburgh and in Heidelberg. While in Heidelberg he wrote to his home church and volunteered as a medical missionary to China. Although he had been offered a position on the staff of Queen's University, he chose to go with the pioneer group in 1891, to the new work which the Canadian Methodist Church proposed to establish in Szechwan.

At that time, the Canadian Methodist Church had its only overseas mission in Japan, where it had no intention of establishing medical work. Dr. Omar Kilborn was largely instrumental in persuading his church to start work, including medical work, in China; and the Rev. Vergil Hart, a retired missionary living in Burlington, Ontario, who had worked with two American Methodist Episcopal Missions in East China, advised that Szechwan should be the scene of the new venture.

Before leaving Ontario, Dr. Omar Kilborn married Miss Jennie Fowler, B.A. (Queen's), the daughter of a Professor of Natural Sciences at Queen's University. She travelled with him and the rest of the party on the journey which, in those days (and until about 1917), took roughly three months by river steamer and houseboat from Shanghai to Chengtu, up the Yangtse and Min Rivers. To his great sorrow Mrs. Kilborn died of cholera in Chengtu in 1892, only about two months after they had reached their journey's end.

A year after this loss, Dr. Kilborn was sent by his Mission to Shanghai to meet a party of new missionaries and escort them up-river to Chengtu. One of the new arrivals was Dr. Mary Alfretta (usually known as Retta) Gifford, M.D., C.M. (Trinity, Toronto), who became the first woman doctor with modern training to work in West China, that is, in China West of the Yangtse Gorges. The long river journey gave them ample time to become acquainted, and before the journey was over they announced their engagement. They were married in Chengtu on May 24, 1894.

Retta Gifford Kilborn was born in a log house on her parents' farm about three miles from Meaford, Ontario. She was the eldest of eight children, and since the eldest in a large farming family was expected to help with the home and farm work, she was unable to begin high school studies until after she was 18 years of age. She was determined to study medicine at a time when very few women anywhere were permitted to study medicine, but by dogged perseverance she achieved her goal. She was admitted to the Women's Medical College, Toronto (later absorbed into Trinity University), and graduated in 1891 with the Trinity degrees of M.D., C.M.

Dr. Retta Gifford then commenced private practice in Owen Sound, about 20 miles from her birthplace. A year later she was invited by the Canadian Methodist Church, through its Woman's Missionary Society, to go as a pioneer medical missionary to the recently opened mission in Szechwan. She accepted the challenge and sailed for China in 1893.

After her marriage, she joined her husband in the task of establishing a centre for medical work in West China, during a time of great political turbulence. Anti-foreign riots and repercussions of the Boxer Rising were the background of their life for the next seven years. Immediately after their marriage they were stationed in Kiating (now Loshan), a city on the Min River about 100 miles south of Chengtu, where their first child, Leslie Gifford Kilborn, was born on April 7, 1895. In May, they were moved back to Chengtu just in time for anti-foreign riots, in which all foreign-owned property in the city was destroyed. After some adventurous days in hiding they were able to make their way, in the middle of the night, to a boat that started them on the long journey back to Shanghai.

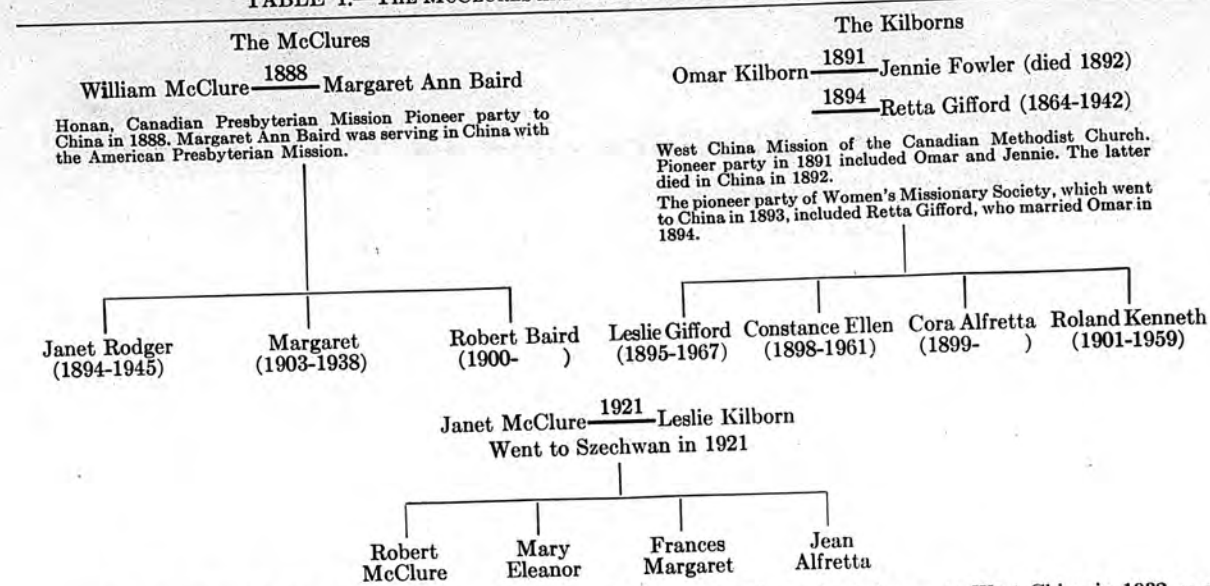

Fig. 3.—Dr. Retta Gifford Kilborn about 1930, shortly before her retirement in 1932.

On their return to Chengtu later that same year, Dr. Retta Kilborn opened a hospital for women and children, while her husband continued his recognized leadership in the pioneer group which established a hospital for men, and in 1910 founded the West China Union University. Dr. Omar L. Kilborn was the first Chairman of the Senate of the new university, and was prominent among those who moved forward to the establishment, in 1914, of its Faculty of Medicine (Fig. 4). The two Canadian Mission Hospitals were for many years the principal teaching hospitals of the Faculty of Medicine.

From the founding of the university until his death, while on leave in 1920, he was a member of the teaching staff (Fig. 5). In those early days and in that remote area, university teachers were in short supply, so he taught among other medical and science subjects, chemistry, physiology and ophthalmology. Their second child, Constance Ellen, was born in Chengtu in 1898, and their second daughter, Cora Alfretta, in 1899, while on furlough in Canada, and a second son, Roland Kenneth, in December 1901, in Chengtu. In addition to her responsibilities in bringing up the children, Dr. Retta Kilborn was a member of the University Faculty and taught pediatrics, therapeutics and other subjects to medical students.

In those early days it was the general feeling that lay missionaries should be ordained in order to be on the same footing as their pastoral brethren, so Dr. Omar Kilborn was accorded special ordination as a minister of the church he served. He was one of the organizers of the Chinese Red Cross Society in Szechwan and, during the Chinese Revolution in 1911, which overthrew the Manchu Dynasty, he went out to serve the sick and wounded. An American, the Rev. James M. Yard of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, wrote of him at that time:

“Dr. Kilborn was touched with the sufferings of the soldiers, who usually had no one to give them first aid. He went out under the very primitive Chinese Red Cross and spent months with the army. He had difficulty in getting proper food. It was the rainy season . . . and he usually had to go on foot . . . (with) his bare feet in straw sandals and thus marched through the mud of the battlefields. Knowledge of him spread everywhere. Here was a great physician who had left the comfort of his well-equipped hospital to serve common soldiers. [Soldiers were not honoured in China in those days.] The Chinese said, ‘Surely, he is a holy man, we have scarcely [ever] seen such love for humanity.’”

In 1919 the Kilborns went home to Canada on their third furlough. While there, in April 1920, Victoria University conferred upon Dr. Omar Kilborn the honorary degree of D.D. A little more than one month later he died of pneumonia following an attack of the virulent form of influenza that was an aftermath of the 1914-18 war.

The Christian memorial service in Chengtu was attended by a host of Chinese friends as well as large numbers of missionaries. But the non-Christian leaders of the Chinese community planned a memorial which is one of the most interesting events in the annals of missionary work: Dr. Kilborn's picture, hung with immense, beautifully embroidered banners, was set up on a large table in the great open court of the Confucian Temple. Buddhist priests in white mourning costume conducted the ceremony during which they chanted prayers and recited portions of the Buddhist scriptures. Never before had a missionary been honoured in that way; and never since. The tributes paid to Omar L. Kilborn at that service were not mere sculptured praise; they were statements of fact to which the work that survived him bears enduring testimony. He was an expert linguist, a careful administrator, an able speaker, a constructive educator, a faithful friend. Most significantly of all for his work in China, he was implicitly trusted by the Chinese because of his unsparing devotion to their interests. He was the author of several books, including "Heal the Sick", a book on medical missionary work, published in Canada in 1910, and "Chinese Lessons", a book for first-year students of Chinese in West China, published in Chengtu in 1917. This last-named was the most important book used by all foreign students of the Chinese language in West China until the 1930's.

Fig. 6.—Hospital for Women and Children, Chengtu, Szechwan, West China (1932).

After her husband's death, Dr. Retta Kilborn returned to West China and spent most of the next 12 years on the staff of the Faculty of Medicine and of the Canadian Mission Hospital for Women and Children in Chengtu (Fig. 6). She had, with her husband, played an important part in establishing the Faculty of Medicine (later called the College of Medicine) of the W.C.U.U. She now fought over again the battles of her youth in helping to persuade the authorities to open the university, including the Medical College, to women students, for women were at first not admitted to the university.

Dr. Retta Kilborn had the same quality of stalwart faith as her husband. She was undismayed by the turbulent conditions and recurrent dangers which she and the other pioneers experienced. In the terrifying riots of 1895, which almost cost them their lives, their missionary purpose and their devotion to the Chinese people never faltered. Dr. Retta Kilborn, like her husband, was an able linguist and was completely trusted by the Chinese people. She was one of the pioneers in the movement against foot-binding and early in her career became president of the Chengtu Anti-Footbinding Society. She lived to see the day when that custom, which had brought such pain to small girls, was abolished by law. By common consent, her greatest contribution was in the treatment of children's diseases. She continued her work in West China until her retirement in 1933. She died in Toronto on December 1, 1942 in her 79th year.

While Drs. Omar and Retta Kilborn were involved in establishing West China University their eldest son, Leslie Gifford, went home to Canada for his education.

In 1913 he passed his senior matriculation (from Humberstone Collegiate, Toronto) and was awarded an Edward Blake Scholarship in science and modern languages. He enrolled in Victoria College, University of Toronto, in the honours course of physiology and biochemistry, and graduated in 1917 with first-class honours and the Victoria Silver Medal in Science. He then registered for postgraduate work in physiology, and obtained most of the money necessary to finance himself by being an animal-house attendant, and by doing other available jobs. Also, he carried a heavy load as a demonstrator in physiology. His two sisters and younger brother likewise worked in various ways while they were studying, respectively, arts and education, arts and nursing, and civil engineering.

In 1918 Leslie obtained his M.A. in physiology from the University of Toronto, and then continued his studies in medicine, graduating in 1921. In 1921, also, he married Janet R. McClure, M.D. (Toronto), daughter of Dr. William McClure, one of the pioneers of the Canadian Presbyterian Mission, who went to Honan in North China in 1888. Leslie and his wife then set out for West China in the autumn of 1921. En route they were able to visit, briefly, Janet's parents in North China.

On arrival in Chengtu they were sent at once to Penghsien, a city about 30 miles north of Chengtu, instead of being required, like most new missionaries, to study Chinese at the Language School of the W.C.U.U. This was because the need for medical help in Penghsien was urgent and there were no modern-trained doctors there. Also, it was felt that because Leslie and Janet had spoken Chinese as children they could get along without the aid of the Language School.

Fig. 7.—Students at work in physiology laboratory, W.C.U.U., about 1928. Dr. L. G. Kilborn is second from right.

After spending about 18 months at Penghsien, doing incidental medical work while acquiring as full a command as possible of the Chinese language, Drs. Leslie and Janet Kilborn were moved to Chengtu. There Leslie began immediately his teaching of physiology and biochemistry in the Faculties of Medicine and Dentistry of the West China Union University, giving all his lectures in Chinese (Fig. 7).

In July 1923, their first child, Robert McClure Kilborn, was born at Mount Omei, a summer resort for many missionaries, not far from Leslie's birthplace, Kiating.

During the years 1921-1927 the province of Szechwan was in constant turmoil because of the feuds among local war-lords. Not long after the birth of their second child, Mary Eleanor, Leslie was shot while the family was returning from a holiday at Mt. Omei in 1925. He received serious wounds from a dum-dum bullet, and more than once he was not expected to recover. For four months his condition was serious and progress was slow.

On his recovery from these wounds, which left him with a permanently disabled left shoulder, Leslie, like his parents an able linguist, continued his teaching in the university and the translating of a textbook of physiology into Chinese. He also produced a laboratory manual of physiology (Fig. 8) (with the help of Chinese medical students and an elderly Chinese "teacher"—a scholar to whom modern science was meaningless).

Their third child, Frances Margaret, was born on a small river junk as they were travelling to Chungking, en route to Shanghai, during the Nationalist Revolution in 1927. The larger vessels on which they travelled from Chungking to Shanghai were often under fire and the families frequently had to take shelter, either in a cargo hold or behind the armour plating protecting the ship's bridge. They arrived in Shanghai just in time to see that city captured by the Nationalist forces under General Chiang Kaishek, so that once again they were under fire, and within a few days they had to move to three different locations as they sought safety for their three small children and themselves.

In 1927-28, while on their first furlough to Canada, Leslie completed his postgraduate studies at the University of Toronto, and was awarded the Ph.D. degree in physiology. In the autumn of 1928, the Kilborns with their three children returned to Chengtu. But before leaving, Leslie had managed to work in a brief period at the Carnegie Nutrition Laboratory in Boston. When they sailed from Vancouver, included in their baggage was a Benedict apparatus for determining basal metabolic rates under field conditions, for he planned to study various physiological characteristics of some of the "aboriginal" races on the West China border. Their fourth child, Jean Alfretha, was born in Chengtu in 1930.

In addition to a heavy teaching schedule in physiology and pharmacology, and also in technical English, Dr. Leslie Kilborn was elected to successive posts of administrative responsibility in the university, culminating in the Directorship of the College of Medicine and Dentistry, a post which he held until the end of 1950, for much of the time concurrently with the deanship of the Faculty of Medicine.

In the summer of 1937, when the Sino-Japanese War broke out, the Kilborns, in common with all other members of the staff of the W.C.U.U., helped to welcome refugee students and staff of colleges, and even of whole universities, who streamed into Chengtu during the next few years. Leslie's responsibilities were tremendous in helping to find accommodation for the medical contingents from Cheeloo University, the Medical and Dental Colleges of the National Central University and, later, the students from the Peking Union Medical College. He arranged for them to continue their studies in the buildings and laboratories of the W.C.U.U., and in the clinics and hospitals associated with the College of Medicine and Dentistry. The last large groups to arrive came in 1941-42, the School of Nursing of the Peking Union Medical College and later a contingent of students and staff of Yenching University.

Leslie and Janet usually had their home filled to capacity with staff members of one or other of the refugee universities. Among those who lived in the Kilborn home for longer or shorter periods were: President Wu I-Fang of Ginling College, Dr. and Mrs. W. P. Penn and their two daughters (University of Nanking), Mr. Michael Sullivan (later with the University of Malaya and now at the University of London's School of Oriental and African Studies), Dr. and Mrs. Leslie Chen and their two daughters (he a well-known psychiatrist, at that time with the National Central University and now in the United States), Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Yeh (then with the University of Nanking, and now with Chung Chi College, Chinese University of Hong Kong), Dr. You Shou-shan (a young physiologist, now working with the Canadian Government in Ottawa), Dr. Ruth Chester (Ginling College), and several others.

In addition to his heavy responsibilities as a teacher and administrator, Leslie carried on research work among the Miao, Nosu and other peoples of the West China Border regions. He was a strong supporter of the West China Border Research Society and was editor of the Society's Journal, 1925-1934 and 1936-1941. He was president of the Society in 1941-1942. Janet stood shoulder to shoulder with Leslie through these turbulent years.

Janet Rodger McClure Kilborn, M.D. (Toronto), was born in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, on October 6, 1894, the eldest child of Dr. and Mrs. William McClure, whose medical mission work was first in Honan, and later at Cheeloo University, in Tsinan, Shantung.

Dr. William McClure, who was born in Lachute, Quebec, received his education at McGill University, and he was always proud of the fact that he had been a student under William (later Sir William) Osler. Before going to China in 1888 as a member of the pioneer Canadian Presbyterian Mission team to North China, he had been superintendent of the Montreal General Hospital. In China, a year later, he met and married Margaret Ann Baird of the American Presbyterian Mission in South China. After long years of service as a medical missionary in Honan, including the dangerous period of the Boxer Uprising of 1900, he became Professor of Medicine in Cheeloo University in 1917. He remained there, even after his official retirement, until the invading Japanese army made it necessary to leave. McGill University awarded him an honorary LL.D. degree in recognition of his long and outstanding contribution to the cause of medical education in China. He died in Toronto in 1956, about three months after his one hundredth birthday.

Janet led a life equally full of challenges faced and steadfastly countered. She gave herself fully to the care of her family. As well, she devoted a considerable part of her time to conducting a clinic in ophthalmology. Later she helped with the health problems of the university staff and students. She taught pediatrics and technical medical English to medical and dental students. She paid the price with her health.

While Leslie was seriously ill following his gunshot wound in 1925, her blood pressure began to rise. The political turmoil and dangerous vicissitudes of the next 14 years did nothing to reduce the causes of her hypertension, so their furlough in 1935-36 was especially welcome. En route to Canada they travelled via Manchuria and Siberia with their four children in order that Leslie might attend the International Physiological Congress in Moscow and Leningrad. They also travelled to Finland, Sweden, Denmark and England, and visited various medical schools.

In 1936 they were all back again in Chengtu, and were on vacation at Mt. Omei in the summer of 1937 when the Sino-Japanese War erupted with the so-called Marco Polo Bridge incident, and messages began to arrive in Chengtu from universities in north and east China, seeking refuge in the West. They and their university colleagues returned to Chengtu as quickly as possible in order to prepare for the enormous influx of refugees. Day by day they undertook the almost superhuman task of accommodating four refugee universities, also parts of others, and individual students from other universities who had independently made their way from the war zones to Chengtu.

In 1939, after the Japanese had started to bomb Chengtu, the "Canadian School" (primarily for the children of missionaries, but accepting many others—both Chinese and Western) moved from Chengtu to Jenshow, about 65 miles to the south, and remained there until the end of the war. Janet spent two years with the school as a "house mother" and gave part of her time as school physician. During the second of these two years Janet had a small cerebral hemorrhage, but made a good recovery. However, she was naturally anxious for the safety of their son, Robert, who had returned to Canada in 1941 and who had joined the Royal Canadian Air Force on completion of his high school work. She began to have occasional attacks of angina.

In 1943, when Canada and China first established independent diplomatic relations, Dr. Leslie Kilborn was requested by the Canadian Government to assist the newly appointed Canadian Minister, General Victor Odlum, in establishing the first Canadian Legation in Chungking, the wartime capital of China. He was given the temporary rank of Counsellor and Adviser on Chinese Affairs, and spent four months in this very absorbing work.

In the late autumn of 1943 the Kilborn family returned to Canada on furlough. Their journey was south-westward by air "over the hump" at over 20,000 feet without oxygen. After a month's delay in Calcutta, they were suddenly notified that they had been granted passage on an American troop transport due to sail shortly from Bombay. In order to get passage with their three daughters and two teenage daughters of West China missionaries, whom they had agreed to escort home, they had to travel by two routes from Calcutta to Bombay, Janet in charge of one section and Leslie of the other. During their week in Bombay, Janet and Leslie nursed several of the girls through attacks of dengue fever. On board the troop transport they journeyed homeward on a zig-zag course across the Indian Ocean to Sydney, and from Australia to San Francisco. In late November they crossed the continent by train to Toronto.

Janet had the joy of meeting once more her father and her son. She saw the younger children settled into Toronto schools. They adjusted to a new environment and did outstandingly well. In 1944 she had a relatively mild attack of coronary occlusion but appeared to make a complete recovery. Robert was still in the R.C.A.F. and so they made plans for Janet to remain in Toronto with the three girls and for Leslie to return to Free China; but before Leslie was able to leave Toronto, she had a very severe coronary occlusion and, after some months of hospital treatment, died on May 10, 1945.

Besides Janet, another of Dr. and Mrs. William McClure's children did much to make his parents' lives of service into a McClure family tradition. Robert Baird McClure, M.D. (Toronto), F.R.C.S. (Edin.), Janet's younger brother, became a medical missionary to China in 1924.*

Fig. 13.—Robert B. McClure.

Almost from the day of his arrival in Honan he attracted attention, not only because of his energy and enthusiasm, but also because of the novel scheme of training he adopted to give practitioners of the traditional system of Chinese medicine at least the rudiments of scientific medicine. During much of the period of the Sino-Japanese War, 1937-1945, he became an almost legendary figure as the first "Commandant" of the organization which came to be known throughout Free China as the Friends' Ambulance Unit. He is now serving with a Canadian Mission Hospital in India.

After making arrangements for the continued education of his children, Leslie Kilborn sailed, once more under wartime conditions, to India in September 1945. Then again over the "hump" of the Himalayas and he was back in Chengtu, alone, late in 1945. Two years later, in 1947, he flew to Hong Kong to marry Dr. Jean E. Millar, whom the Kilborns had known for over 15 years in Chengtu and Jenshow.

*In 1926, Amy Hislop, who had been engaged to Robert before he left Canada, followed him to China where they married.

Fig. 14.—Dr. Jean Millar Kilborn (1952).

Jean Ewald Kilborn, née Millar, M.D. (Western Ontario), and specialist certificate in anesthesia, was born in Guelph, Ontario, in 1906, the daughter of a well-known hardware merchant. After completing her secondary education in Guelph, she studied medicine at the University of Western Ontario. In 1932 she was sent by the Women's Missionary Society of the United Church of Canada to West China, on a three-year appointment, to take over the work of Dr. Retta Kilborn who was soon to retire.

On her arrival in Chengtu, a civil war with street fighting had just ceased, and Jean Millar had to climb over numerous barricades to make her way through the city streets to the Canadian Mission Hospital for Women and Children. In the operating room, she was introduced to Dr. Retta Kilborn, who promptly gave her the task of completing the administration of an anesthetic to a patient on the table, while Dr. Retta went to supervise the admission of more of the wounded women and children still streaming into the hospital. Later Dr. Jean Millar also took over from Dr. Retta Kilborn much of her teaching of pediatrics to medical students.

Jean Millar's association with the Kilborn family was made even closer during the two years, 1941-1943, when she was physician to the Canadian School, which had been evacuated from Chengtu to Jenshow because of the constant bombing of Chengtu by Japanese planes. This school was attended by all four of the Kilborn children, and one year Janet and Jean were both present in the school.

After their marriage in St. John's Cathedral, Hong Kong, Leslie and Jean returned to Chengtu to continue the contribution of the Kilborn family to W.C.U.U. But their time there was relatively short.

At the end of World War II, the refugee universities in Chengtu moved back to their former homes, the last of them leaving in the summer of 1946. But a new wave of troubles soon engulfed them. The W.C.U.U. had scarcely returned to normal before life was again disturbed by the practical certainty that the Communists would soon control the whole country. Province by province, their armies approached Szechwan, and on Christmas Day, 1949, the capitulation of Chengtu made the "liberation" of mainland China almost complete. Before this took place, Leslie and Jean were able to work in a short furlough of a few months in Canada, returning to Chengtu late in 1949.

Dr. Leslie Kilborn was not the only member of the family of Drs. Omar and Retta Kilborn to return to serve the cause of modern education under Christian auspices in China. His sister, Constance Ellen Kilborn, who was born in Chengtu in 1898, received her honours degree in English and history from Victoria College, Toronto, in 1919. After obtaining her teacher's qualification from the Faculty of Education of the University of Toronto, she taught for a year in Alma College, St. Thomas, and then married Lewis C. Walmsley, a classmate. In 1921 the Walmsleys set out for West China, where after two years in language study they were asked to take responsibility for the "Canadian School" in Chengtu.

This school, built on land adjacent to that of the W.C.U.U., was originally established for the education of the children of missionaries. Under the principalship of Lewis Walmsley, aided by Constance, the school was placed on a wider basis. Chinese children, whose parents were engaged in many different occupations, were also admitted to the school, which was recognized by the Ontario Department of Education as an Ontario school. Junior and senior matriculation examinations were conducted in the Canadian School in Chengtu, the papers being sent to Toronto for marking.

The Walmsleys steadily held the school to high standards, not only in Chengtu but also during the refugee period in Jenshow, and when immediately after World War II, while communications between Western Szechwan and the outside world remained extremely difficult, what was left of the Canadian School staff and student body migrated "over the hump" and settled down to school work again in Mussoorie in Northern India.

In 1947 the Walmsleys returned to Chengtu and received the school buildings back from Ginling College, which had occupied them during the latter part of the war. But with the approach of the Communist armies the remaining time was short. Lewis accepted a position on the staff of the University of Toronto, De-

Lewis Calvin Walmsley, B.A., D.Paed. (Toronto), was born in Picton, Ontario, in 1897. He graduated from the University of Toronto, Victoria College, from the honours mathematics and physics course in 1919, and then secured his teacher's qualifications from the Faculty of Education at the same time as Constance Kilborn. On one of their furloughs from China he was awarded the degree of Doctor of Pedagogy, his thesis being on Chinese education.

When the Walmsleys returned to Toronto in 1948, Lewis was appointed Associate Professor in the Department of East Asiatic Studies where, for some years, he was Chairman of the Department. He retired in June 1962.

Lewis Walmsley is not only an educator but also a good linguist and artist. In collaboration with Chang Yin-Nam he published in 1958 a translation of Poems of Wang Wei (Charles E. Tuttle Co.). He has painted in oils, scenes in West China and, more recently, in Canada and other parts of the world. The graduates of the Canadian School are an abiding testimony to the qualities of Lewis and Constance Walmsley as educators.

Under their leadership and inspiration the Canadian School possessed a quality of culture and liberal education, along with high academic standards, which was unique. In the course of its short history, the school produced two students who later became Rhodes Scholars, and many other men and women who have distinguished themselves in practically all walks of life.

Leslie Kilborn's younger sister, Cora Alfretta, born in 1899, also devoted the greater part of her life to promoting nursing education in China. She graduated from Victoria College, Toronto, in 1920 with a B.A. honours degree in modern languages, and then trained in the School of Nursing of the Toronto General Hospital. After graduation Cora studied public health nursing at the University of Toronto and later completed the course in teaching and administration. In 1926 she went to West China under the Women's Missionary Society of the United Church of Canada and worked in the Chengtu Hospital for Women and Children, one of the teaching hospitals of the W.C.U.U. For almost five years Dr. Retta Kilborn and Cora Alfretta Kilborn gave leadership in medical and nursing education in this hospital which the mother had originally founded. After Dr. Retta's retirement, Cora continued to work and teach in Chengtu.

Fig. 16.—Cora Alfretta Kilborn, R.N.

For a few years, during the final illness of her mother, Cora, with true Chinese filial devotion, returned to Toronto to give special care to her mother. After her mother's death in 1941, Cora returned to Chengtu and resumed her work there. By this time the Hospital for Women and Children had been destroyed, probably by incendiaries, during the Sino-Japanese War, and a new development in West China was afoot, which reached its culmination immediately after the war. All the teaching hospitals of the W.C.U.U. were brought under the centralized control of the University and one of the new projects was a degree course in nursing. Cora Kilborn was appointed Head of the new University Department of Nursing. This was centred in the University Hospital, newly built on the University grounds. Only one class had graduated before the communist take-over in 1950. Cora returned to Canada, where she transferred to home mission work, being in charge of a home mission hospital in Manitoba for five years. She then did private duty nursing until her marriage in 1952 to Mr. Benjamin W. Cannell.

When Drs. Leslie and Jean Kilborn returned to Chengtu in 1949, they were accompanied by Leslie's eldest daughter, Mary Eleanor, who had been born in Chengtu in 1924. Mary Eleanor Kilborn, R.N., had received most of her elementary and high school education at the Canadian School in Chengtu and Jenshow. After the family returned to Canada toward the end of 1943, she completed her secondary school education in Toronto, and enrolled in McMaster University in Hamilton, but gave up her university course to study nursing at the Women's College Hospital in Toronto. After doing post-graduate work in nursing in Montreal, she accompanied her father and Dr. Jean Kilborn to Chengtu in October 1949, to begin there the contribution of the third generation of the Kilborn family to medical work in China. Immediately upon arrival, for she had acquired a working knowledge of Chinese in childhood, she began work in the University Hospital of the W.C.U.U. But her time of service to the people of the land of her birth was short. Chengtu surrendered to the Communist army on Christmas Day, 1949. Then followed a period of disruption and disorganization, and reorganization into a new pattern consequent upon the Communist take-over. After less than two years of work, Mary left Chengtu in 1951, and returned to Canada. She is now married and has two children, but still continues as a nurse in Scarborough, a suburb of Toronto.

When Drs. Leslie and Jean Kilborn reached Chengtu in October 1949, they shouldered their full share of the anxieties, administrative problems and delicate negotiations in which the staff members of the W.C.U.U. were involved, both before the Communist army entered Chengtu and in the two years and more that followed. By reason of his leadership in the administration of the University, Leslie had a heavier load of delicate responsibilities and severe anxieties than most of the people there, but he never lost two outstanding qualities of his personality: his deep reverence for facts, and a sense of humour under burdens that would have crushed the spirit of an ordinary man.

In March 1952, Drs. Leslie and Jean Kilborn left Chengtu, realizing that their service to the Chinese people could no longer be continued there. On their departure from Szechwan, almost 250 man- or woman-years of life service of the Kilborn family* in West China had ended, but their service to medical education and higher education for the Chinese people continued.

Leslie, with Jean at his right hand, accepted an invitation to the Chair of Physiology in the Faculty of Medicine of the University of Hong Kong, with duties to commence on September 1, 1952. He filled in the intervening months by surveying medical education in the Philippines for the Protestant churches in that country, which were considering the establishment of a medical college. He also continued work on an almost completed textbook of pharmacology, for use by Chinese medical students. Although these final chapters were mailed back to Chengtu, he never received any information regarding the fate of this book.

While on the staff of the University of Hong Kong, from 1952 to 1960, Leslie served for three years as Dean of the Faculty of Medicine, and developed his department to such an extent that on his retirement from that university in the summer of 1960, the University of Hong Kong advertised for three professors to take over his work, splitting the Department of Physiology into Departments of Physiology, Pharmacology and Biochemistry. One of these new departments is now under the chairmanship of one of Leslie's former Chinese colleagues in the W.C.U.U.

*It should be noted that this estimate does not include the years of service of Dr. and Mrs. William McClure or Dr. and Mrs. Robert B. McClure which represents an additional 160 years (approximately)!

Almost as soon as the Kilborns arrived in Hong Kong, they began to take an interest in the newly organized Chung Chi College, a Christian College offering post-secondary studies in arts and science, and before long Leslie was appointed to the Board of Governors, of which he soon became chairman. Leslie was closely associated with the plans for a second university, a Chinese university, in Hong Kong, of a quality which would make it a worthy successor to the former 13 Christian universities and colleges in China. In 1956, Chung Chi College moved to its permanent site on the seashore in the New Territories and adjacent to the site now being carved out of the mountains for the new Chinese University of Hong Kong. In 1960, on his retirement from the University of Hong Kong, Leslie accepted an appointment as vice-president of Chung Chi College. In that capacity he brought his wisdom and patience and profound experience in pioneer and complex situations to bear on the multifarious problems and delicate personal relationships which confronted those who guided the discussions and plans to raise the academic standards of the three independent colleges, New Asia College, United College and Chung Chi College. In October 1963, they were federated to become the Foundation Colleges of the Chinese University of Hong Kong. When Drs. Jean and Leslie Kilborn left Hong Kong in the summer of 1963, they brought to a close 72 years of continuous service. Three generations of Kilborns had devoted this time to medical work and higher education since Dr. Omar Leslie Kilborn and his wife first set sail for China in 1891. Chung Chi College has named its Board Room the Kilborn Room to commemorate the contribution of this family; the furnishings of this room were provided by friends and admirers of the family.

Canadians should be proud of such a family. The Kilborn family, and others of similar quality, are commemorated by the Foundation Stone of Chung Chi College Chapel which records that the chapel was donated by the United Church of Canada, "in memory of all Canadian missionaries who have given their lives to the service of God and of their fellow men in China". As senior Canadian missionary in Hong Kong when the chapel was officially opened in April, 1962, Leslie delivered the address in what has been called by many tourists: "the most beautiful of all college chapels".

In the spring of 1963, Leslie and Jean Kilborn left Hong Kong for retirement in Canada. The subject of Leslie's farewell address to the students and staff of Chung Chi College, later published, was "Awareness"—a quality which Leslie himself and his father before him, always tried to develop—an awareness of the many nuances of life around them.

Not long after their final retirement from the role of active missionaries of the United Church of Canada, Leslie's Alma Mater, Victoria University, Toronto, conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Sacred Letters (D. Lit. S.), in April 1965.

Looking at the World

by Sara B. Downer

On the other side of the world about fifteen degrees farther south lies another campus almost as large as ours. It is known as Hwa Hsi Ba and is outside the south wall of the city of Chengtu, three hundred miles northwest of Chungking. That campus is flat, and its roads are cinder-surfaced. The buildings are of gray brick with gray tiled roofs, which turn up gracefully at the corners. Many of the ridge poles are ornamented with sprawling dragons or other queer beasts. Some of the buildings have wide porches, the roofs of which are supported by huge red pillars. Outside woodwork is painted in red, yellow, green, blue, and black. From a tower a clock booms forth the hours except when stopped for an air raid. Roads have irrigation ditches along one side and are shaded by many trees.

That campus of the West China Union University or Hwa Da as it is commonly called, is now the home of five other institutions which have had to leave their own campuses to the Japanese. They are: Nanking University, Ginling College, Cheeloo University, Yenching University and P.U.M.C. Graduate School of Nursing. Temporary dormitories and residences for teachers have been put up all around the fringes of the campus. The University Hospital building, which cannot be fully equipped at this time is furnishing much needed class room space, and a Chemistry building has been erected. Yenching's dormitories are inside of the city and some of their teaching is carried on there. With some three thousand students and faculty of six institutions you can imagine that the campus is a busy place.

Between the six institutions there is a great variety of courses offered: all the usual courses in Arts and Sciences, Pharmacy, Medicine, Dentistry, Home Economics, Agriculture and Journalism. Of course, Chinese is the basic language though some of the older institutions do much of their teaching in English.

Campus activities are numerous. There is a ~~Five-U~~ Choral Society which sings parts of The Messiah every year. There are many smaller choral groups, and an orchestra which is rather heavy as to the violin section, but has at least one of everything else. There are The Youth Corps, Department Clubs of every description, Provincial Clubs, and sundry groups of all kinds. The campus religious life is organized around the Community Church and the Student Christian Movement. There are three services held on Sundays: one at nine A.M., one in English at four, and one at seven in the evening. The morning service is held in the largest hall on the campus which seats about a thousand. It was Hwa Da's gymnasium, a barn of a room with white-washed walls and windows high up near the ceiling. It is the only place big enough and is also used for all other large gatherings. Special music is furnished by a student choir accompanied by a small reed organ. Each institution carries on its own program of retreats, Bible classes and Fellowship groups.

The girls of four institutions are housed in buildings on the east side of the campus. Hwa Da has a roomy compound surrounded by high brick walls. It is called The Woman's College. Within the compound are two large, gray, brick dormitories with red pillared porches facing each other across what will some day be a quadrangle. Back on one side are the Home Economics house and a residence for women teachers in the University. Near the front gate are three half brick, two-story buildings, which house the freshmen and a house for foreign teachers. The whole place will hold three hundred and thirty-eight students and twenty-six teachers. The present enrollment is four hundred and fifty, so many have to live at home. The two permanent dormitories are as nice as some of those here except that there is no heat and no plumbing. The boys on the campus call the Woman's College "the Palace."

The temperature in Chengtu varies from around freezing in the coldest weather to around a hundred degrees in the hottest. There is usually one light snow in the winter, and the humidity is always high. The library is the only building which has heat in cold weather. Some of the students use charcoal braziers in their rooms. The faculty houses have fire places. Breakfast is at seven, and she who comes fifteen minutes late is apt to find no food. The regular menu is rice porridge for breakfast and steamed rice for the other two meals. With the rice they have four kinds of vegetables: spinach, carrots, cabbage, and peanuts, for example. Meat is cooked with the vegetables once a week. Girls buy eggs, milk, or fruit individually as they can afford them.

The school uniform for girls is a long, blue, cotton gown. That is required when they have to appear en masse or represent the school at some public meeting. They usually wear bright colored straight gowns. In cold weather, most of them now wear coats in the western style. Hats are practically unknown. Hot water is available before breakfast. Water is heated for baths two or three afternoons a week. Boiled water for drinking is available at certain times. The girls keep it in their rooms in tea pots or thermos bottles. Classes are held from eight to twelve and one to five, though many are put in at seven in the morning and in the evening because of class room congestion. In the girls' dormitories the lights are turned off at ten thirty p.m. when the electricity is functioning. At least a fourth of the time studying has to be done by candle light.

Perhaps as we hurry between comfortable rooms and class rooms we can sometimes think of that campus on the other side of the world where knowledge is being sought just as eagerly as it is here.

Footnotes

1. We are fully aware that the above list is inaccurate in certain respects, though it is as nearly correct as we can make it by reference to University catalogues and other records; or from memory where no records exist. We shall therefore be glad to receive any corrections to make our records more accurate.
2. Part-time indicates anything from one hour per week, to half-time service.
3. Though missionaries may have served under more than one College the designation is generally that of their major responsibility; though in certain instances where a clear demarcation is possible the name appears in two places.

Several administrative officers have been newly appointed. Chiang Chih-ang who was Comptroller before is now appointed as Dean of Studies, with Mr. Willmott as his associate. Mr. Yang Yu-chih has been appointed the Comptroller as well as the Bursar, with William Small as Associate Bursar. The Bursar's Office is now under the Comptroller, in accordance with Government regulations.

Mr. Yang has been for many years Head of our Economics Department and has proved to be an efficient man and a steady leader not only in his Department but in various committees of the University. He is also one with high scholarship in his line of work. At present, besides his work in the University he is teaching in the Szechwan University and Chen Hwa University. With this additional duty he will have to rearrange his work in such a way that he will be able to give sufficient time to the office of the Comptroller and as Head of the Economics Department. You will remember Mr. Yang was also the one who was appointed by the Cultural Education Bureau to attend the first Conference on Higher Education in the South-West, held in Chungking last summer.

Mr. Chiang Chih-ang was chairman of the Committee appointed to act for me during my absence from the University last spring, and he has proved to be a capable and efficient administrator in the University. At present he is also the Head of the Sociology Department.

Dr. Chow Hsu-teh, who was appointed as Dean of Studies at the beginning of this term, has now been appointed as Director of the College of Medicine and Dentistry to succeed Dr. Leslie Kilborn, as the latter had resigned from this office. Dr. Chow is the Associate Director of Health in the Chwan Hsi Area. With his connection with the Government he should be able to link up our work with the Government programme of Health, and should also be most helpful to solve problems affecting our hospital work.

We are now busy with anti-feudalistic study. Classes have been stopped since last Thursday for this purpose. Many of our students come from landlords' families; we hope that by carrying through the study programme we shall be able to make our faculty and students understand the land reform policy and be active in helping the Government to make this policy a success.

The Christmas Season is drawing near. We are not sending you a special greeting by cable as its cost would be quite heavy. Although this letter may reach you some time after Christmas we hope you will understand that we have you all in our minds and wish you all a Happy Christmas. May the message of Peace from our Saviour become a reality.

The last date for registration is October 7th, so we may have a few more students who are waiting for money to come from their homes. However, as reported by our Bursar, up to last Friday the number of students who had completed their registration, including the payment of all the fees required, comes to 726. 77 have paid part of their fees with a guarantee that the balance will be paid before the 15th. 191 have not yet paid though they have presented guarantees of payment. The number of free bursaries granted to students for the fall term is 174. Considering the present general economic situation, the number of those who have actually paid their full fees is very encouraging.

The new regulations on Higher Education have been officially announced now. There are very few changes from what was reported to you previously. Such changes are in curriculum, not in administration.

The Board of Directors has not appointed any Vice-President, but they have appointed Dr. Leslie Kilborn as the Western Executive Secretary to succeed Dr. Lindsay. The list of important administrative officers is as follows:

Dr. Chow Hsu-teh has been appointed as Dean of Studies, with Mr. Willmott as Associate; Prof. Chiang Chih-ang as Business Manager (in Chinese Tsung Wu Chang), with Mr. Li Yung-tseng as Associate; the Deans of Arts, Science and Medicine remain the same, i. e. Lo Chung-shu, Arts, Ho Wen-chun, Science, Tsao Chung-liang, Medicine; as Dr. Lindsay has left for home, Dr. Cheo Hai-fan has been appointed Dean of Dentistry. The question of
